Physician assisting is growing as one of the best fields offering a good career opportunity. A physician assistant (PA) is a person, who practices medicine under the supervision of a surgeon or physician, where the person is offered with formal training for providing preventive care, therapeutic and diagnostic services. Candidates, who wish to take this career, must be self-motivated and they should also be capable of making decisions in the case of emergencies.

In the case of inner-city or rural clinics, these professionals will be responsible for offering primary health care to patients where the physician will be present only for a day or two in a week. Even these professionals, who specialize in surgery will have to offer pre-operative and post-operative care and are offered with the responsibility of serving as the primary or secondary assistants at the time of an important surgery.

These professionals can find jobs in penal complexes, public health centers, medical centers in schools and in hospitals. They can choose to work in primary care specialties like family medicine, pediatrics, general internal medicine, etcâ€¦ or even in some specialized fields like geriatrics, emergency medicine, etc.

When it comes to education requirement for becoming physical assistant, there are some of the best schools offering physician assisting programs and these programs are generally offered as two-year full-time courses. Most of these courses are offered in educational health centers, allied health schools, community colleges and in medical schools. When it comes to admission to these schools, physical assistant school requirements differ from one school to another and it is essential for the future PAs to learn about the requirements to be met for seeking admission to some of the best schools.

Generally educational courses for physical assistants will include clinical pharmacology, microbiology, anatomy, physiology, etcâ€¦ The students are also made to participate in clinical rotations in institutional settings and in private practices like surgery or family medicine.

There are websites specially meant for guiding the future PAs on how to get admission to PA schools since the qualification requirement and admission procedure differs from one school to another. Some of these websites are also selling CDs from where students can learn about physician assistant school requirements.

Surveys say that the number of physical assisting jobs is expected to grow at a faster pace in the coming years as compared to several other jobs in the health care industry. Particularly, there will be a huge demand for these professionals in inner city and rural clinics where they are facing a tougher time in attracting physicians to offer medical care to patients.
