Health problems are not restricted to just human beings. Dogâ€™s health problems are also as varied as what we see in human beings. They also face all types of health problems which may be small or big.

There are some diseases that dogs get, which similar to human beings, and some others are unique to dogs. They also get infected with viral diseases, fungal infections, allergies and so on. The Dogs health problems include non-fatal diseases like infection of the digestive system which may be caused due to ingestion of unhealthy food. Infection of the eyes is another problem which dogs face frequently. Dogs also get arthritic problems, Diabetes mellitus, hypothyroidism, Addisonâ€™s disease and endocrine diseases are also common. Apart from that, dog health is also prone to life threatening diseases like cancer, heart problems etc. Domesticated dogs are also prone to certain health problems because they may get access to food that is not good for them. For example chocolates, which are not fatal to human beings. If given in large quantity, the chocolates may induce heart problems, internal bleeding and even epileptic seizures. Grapes and raisins can also induce dogs health problems like kidney problems. The dogs may also face food allergy problems. The pet dogs require a lot of care to keep them healthy. A good diet, regular exercise and not allowing them to eat foreign objects on the streets are the most important things to keep the dog healthy. There are treatments available to treat the health conditions of the dog. Diagnosis is not an easy task as the vet has to assess the condition of the dog out of his experience.

Some of the dogs health problems get cured automatically and also the dogs have the ability to treat themselves with some herbs which help them in getting cured with some small ailments like stomach upset. Dog Healthalso needs to be taken care of constantly.
