If you fall within that segment of those people which has a tendency of gaining and storing fats in the abdominal area, then at some or the other point of time in your life you will be considering the question of going in for a tummy tuck procedure. Although, tummy tucks are being widely performed in today's times, but if you are a first timer, you must be extra cautious with all the aspects related to this procedure. Once you have decided to consult tummy tuck surgeon, it is a good idea to fix a meeting with him/her. The first meeting with your surgeon can be quite stressful as you will be required to undress and let the surgeon examine the area you wish to reduce. Also, you will be required to discuss the changes that you would like to incorporate in your figure and ascertain whether the surgeon is properly qualified to do so.

Hence, your first appointment with the tummy tuck surgeon will require a lot of pre-appointment homework in terms of the questions that you would be asking. The most important thing worth asking a doctor is the number of tummy tucks he has performed. This will give you a fair amount of idea with regards to his experience and whether he knows his job well or not. Following up with the previous query, it is worth considering that how many tummy tucks performed by the doctor. If the number is too high, you might want to look for someone else.

While discussing various aspects of the surgery to be performed, you may ask the doctor for before and after photos of some of his patients along with a video of the same. Seeing this will help you in establishing your belief better. For best results, it is advisable to satisfy yourself on all grounds before undergoing a tummy tuck procedure.
