Taking care of your oral health is important in order to avoid painful and often embarrassing dental problems. Many families have a regular family dentist that treats every member of the family to ensure that they maintain healthy teeth and gums. But is it really necessary to look for a family dentist or just look for different specialists to handle certain procedures?

Family dentistry and general dentistry are virtually interchangeable terms with one notable exception. Although both practice general dentistry, family dentists accept patients from 8 to 80 years old. This makes them different from pediatric dentists who specialize specifically in treating children, or a general dentist who may not necessarily be equipped to handle very young patients.

One of the primary reasons why families just stick to one dentist is convenience. In fact, it is not uncommon in Atlanta to just schedule an appointment for the entire family. This saves time, gas, and money since a family dentist will probably be more inclined to give you a discount.

If your family is thinking about going for a regular dental appointment, a good starting point would be recommendations. Ask a fellow parent during PTA meetings if they know a good dentist for your family. You can also check reviews of local dental facilities to find out which are the best.

Most people are probably having trouble deciding whether or not to seek a specialist—e.g. pediatric, general, or cosmetic dentist—or whether they should just opt for a family dentist. Many families want the best family dentistry Atlanta practitioners can provide, as they would want their children's tooth development to be strictly monitored over time. While a pediatric dentist is specially trained to handle children, who is to say that a family dentist cannot handle the job just as well?

Additionally, as far as specialization is concerned, there is—technically—no such thing as a cosmetic dentist. The term cosmetic dentist is frequently used these days. However, a dentist who practices family dentistry Atlanta families recommend can also perform cosmetic procedures. It should be noted that the only recognized dental specializations are the following: public health, endodontic, oral and maxillofacial pathology, oral and maxillofacial radiology, oral and maxillofacial surgery, orthodontics, periodontics, pediatric dentistry, and prosthodontics.

Picking a regular family dentist can also increase your comfort level as you would feel more at ease if you are accustomed to your dentist's methods. If you are looking for dentists who specialize in the family dentistry Atlanta patients need, then you should check your local listings.
