It doesn't matter what is your age, you have need to take care of your teeth and mouth. If you have strong teeth then you can eat good nutrition food easily without any pain. You can do confident smiling and talking with others only when your mouth is healthy.

If your teeth are falling then that means you have a serious gum disease (sometimes called periodontal or gingival diseases) are infections of the gums, which gradually destroy the support of your natural teeth. So if you are under the grip of such serious gum disease and looking for the specialist periodontics queens, dentist in queens and dental implants queens NY then you must contact Dr. Irene Bokser.

Dr. Irene Bokser is a specialist in Periodontics and Implant ology. She has been in private practice since 2003 and holds a practice in Bayside, periodontics Queens and in Astoria, dental implants Queens. According to her dental plaque is the primary cause of gum disease known as periodontal in genetically susceptible individuals, which is basically a sticky film of bacteria on teeth. Bacteria found in plaque produce toxins or poisons, which irritate the gums. They may cause them to turn red, swell and bleed easily. If this irritation is prolonged, the gums separate from the teeth, causing pockets (spaces) to form. Plaque can also harden into a rough, porous substance known as calculus (or tartar). This can occur both above and below the gum line. As periodontal diseases progress, the supporting gum tissue and bone that holds teeth in place deteriorate.

If not treated, this leads to tooth loss. However, don't be fooled. With periodontal disease, bleeding, redness and swelling do not have to be present. Further, pain is usually not associated with periodontal disease. This disease damages the teeth, gum and jawbone of more than 80% of Americans by age 45.

The problem is that until it gets quite severe, the person often has no symptoms. Sadly, the damage to the support structures of the teeth is irreversible. The good news is that if gum disease is caught in time, its progression can be halted and improved upon, and that is the key.

To stop gum disease from progressing, contact Dr. Irene Bokser dentist in queens may advise periodontal therapy, or deep cleaning. This gets rid of the bacteria in the pocket and provides the necessary conditions for healing to occur.

Currently Dr. Irene Bokser is an attending at New York Hospital of Queens and is an associate clinical professor at NYUCD, aesthetics Department.
