Want to restore the natural hair growth? Then seek to hair transplant surgery, which is emerging with popularity day by day. The process follows of picking hair from that part of the head, which is not susceptible to balding. Then the hair follicle is surgically replanted into that particular balding area. The best thing is that the particular follicle is programmed in a way not to be lost. Eventually the transplanted hair will continue to grow and bring about a youthful look.

Read on to know different types of the hair transplant surgery.

The surgeries in details

To start with, the first is Follicular unit transplant. This is quite a popular method and has been around for quite some time. In this process, a very small graft of hair follicle is taken off from the scalp area, which is not prone to hair thinning. The thin hair extracted is then implanted in the bald area. Then, the area is closed with staple and suture. In this case, there might be a very small scar mark which will eventually get covered with hair growth.

The second hair transplant procedure is follicular unit extraction. This is quite a new technique introduced in the hair transplant domain. The process involves the method of harvesting each of the hair follicle from the sides and also back of the head. The best thing is no deep cut or scalpel strip mark in the scalp.

Another best process is transplant revision or scar revision. The process is applicable for those who has poor results from previous transplants and desperately want to fix it. FUT surgery leaves bad scar on the scalp. In case they want to hide those scars, they would want to use the transplant process to bring back lost hair in that particular area.
