It certainly seems wonderful to have enough hair back on our scalp, to have the impressive look back, and to get back many other such benefits. However, all such things are subjected to your having successful and safe hair transplantation. Since there is the likelihood of getting some undesirable results after hair transplants, you should know them well in advance. Here we deal with this matter truthfully, without tilting our opinion in any direction.

Hair transplants, like any other surgery, come with many risks and possible side effects. Potential surgical and post-surgical medical complications arising from this surgery do exist; this you should know. When we go deeper into this matter and find out how the people who have gone through this surgery feel about this procedure, we get a more unbiased and trustable conclusion.

People, who took the pain to study this matter, surveyed and observed for about one year the people who have had hair transplantation surgery. The study found some people not satisfied with one thing or the other. The complications they found include enlarged scarring, hair follicles inflammation and even infection, excessive bleeding, hiccups, dying of hair follicles, pyogenic granuloma, etc.

Many other side effects that can be noted include weak hair growth, slow healing in the scar, tension and numbness in the scalp, and some other things of such caliber. Moreover, complaints like hyper-pigmentation of the area, cysts and pimples formation, swelling and sometimes pain are also noticed in many cases that happened as post-surgery side effects.

What should be Done to Minimize the Risks & Side Effects

1. Good communication between the surgeon and patient is essential.
2. The potential patient must go through a proper clinical and laboratory analyses.
3. Most relevant and accurate surgical techniques should be used.
4. All the equipment involved should be up to date.
5. Above all, the surgeon must have enough qualification, experience, and he or she should be a well-trained individual who should take care of the patient from every angle.
6. Finally, the patient must understand what his responsibility is and follow the instructions without fail.

Many complications of hair transplantation can be controlled if certain aspects are taken care of. Hair transplants should be a pleasant matter, it must not be something that makes a situation worse.
