Multifaceted Application of Olive Leaf Extract by Julia Roger

Article published on June 4th 2012 | Health

Herbal products are gaining importance globally for various reasons. Not having any side effects is the main advantage of herbal products. Among the various herbal products that are popular, olive leaf extract has carved its own position.

Olive tree, the botanical name of which is Olea europaea has two major products. One is the olive oil which has many beneficial health effects and also known for its mild flavor. Another is the Olive leaf extract which is believed to have anti-aging properties. It is also used as an immune-stimulator for stimulating the immune system and is also believed to have antibiotic properties. Apart from this it is also believed to have antioxidant property. The extract is proven to reduce the blood pressure level in hypertensive patients. The leaf extract also has anti-inflammatory effect and works against fungus infections. The liquid extracted from fresh leaves is rich in antioxidant qualities which is much above the popularly used green tea. The use of natural products is advocated by practitioners of alternative medicine.

These systems of medicine believe that the leaf extract is effective on pathogens and prevents duplication of pathogens. For those who have high levels of bad cholesterol, the olive leaf extract is very useful as it is proved to reduce the Low Density Cholesterol. Sukin is a company manufacturing personal care products from the natural extracts, based in Australia. The products manufactured by sukin do not contain any chemicals and are purely natural extracts. They manufacture skin care products, body care products, deodorants, Exfoliators and hair care products. They have launched their anti-aging products recently during the year 2011. Sukin also has baby products like baby soaps, baby hair care products to match the sensitive skin of the kids.

The highlight of Sukin is the use of natural extracts like Olive Leaf Extract which is gaining acceptance and popularity. Sukin offers the natural products at affordable price which is an added attraction.
