Article published on February 10th 2012 | Home

With springtime fast approaching, homeowners may start seeing a rise in insects, specifically carpenter ants. Because spring generally is a 'wet' season, snow melting and a lot of bad weather will cause wood to rot. This is what carpenter ants thrive in. They like to feast on wet decaying wood and will tunnel inside the wood, foam insulation, along with other materials, nesting and growing in size.

Creating a proper carpenter ants extermination performed, it is easy to free the house of these insects quickly and correctly. By getting rid of these pests you can make sure that your home will hold up and be protected. Based on how bad your infestation is, will depend on the treatment used. You will find different extermination practices among companies. As an example, for people with young children or pets you'll want to go with non-toxic means of extermination. However, often times the infestation is so bad that more advanced treatment may be required.

When looking for carpenter ant extermination to be undertaken, the easiest method to choose a respected business is word of mouth. You're not the only one with these insects in their homes. Other people may have used someone before and will provide a recommendation, or perhaps your neighbors will know of someone. Get a few names of companies and perform a comparison. Many businesses will give you a free cost estimate for the severity of your problem. You should definitely ask questions about ongoing treatment for each year, forms of treatments they provide, and if they guarantee their work.

Having carpenter ants is usually a headache and can wreak havoc on all the wood in and around your house. It's remarkable how much damage they can cause. A quick way to stop the infestation before it starts is to treat the outside of your home early in the season, restore or repair any damaged or rotted wood boards, get rid of any rotted trees where they might discover a dwelling hole, and keep a close eye on locations where you treat, if you see more following the carpenter ants extermination, the procedure may either not have been powerful enough or wasn't applied correctly.

Often times if there is still an infestation after treatment, a reputable company who guarantees their work will come back out, reassess the problem and provide a second kind of treatment, many times at no added cost. Even so, if you are still having a problem after several treatments, it will be time to speak to a contractor who is able to quickly and safely get into those spots to determine if there is a nest that needs to be destroyed. So while doing your comparisons on exterminators the absolute best questions to ask is do they guarantee their treatment and what can they do if the infestation wasn't dealt with to begin with. If a business says they will recharge you to return, you should go with a different one. Get it done correctly the first time.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/home-articles/have-some-help-with-exterminators-to-improve-your-home.htm - Article Side

DJ Willis - About Author:
When looking for a exterminators in New York, there are several companies that feature the qualified exterminators in Long Island, Suffolk and Nassau Counties. Call or find them online to take care of your a ant extermination needs.

Article Keywords:
home improvement, exterminators

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!