If your family seems to be rapidly expanding and your need for space is becoming a top priority, the thought of upping sticks and moving to a new dwelling can be fairly daunting. The process of trudging, kids in tow from one open for inspection to the next, weekend after weekend for potentially months, can take its toll. An increasingly popular choice to accommodate your needs is the purchase of a house and land package. Buying this way will give you more scope for flexibility and any reputable house builder will be more than happy to listen to any variations you may want or your ideas on finishing touches to the home. Although a fairly new concept, a growing number of new-home builders in the Victoria area mean this is a tangible dream.

It takes more than just bedrooms to make a family home. It takes durable finishes and easy access to the outdoors, not to mention spaces that inspire togetherness. And a few areas of the house to get away when it all becomes a bit much! New home builders offering house and land packages are constantly looking for new ways to improve the current layout of properties and there surrounding areas in a bid to make them more accessible to the whole family. From luscious front lawns to large, open-plan social and dining areas, the quest to get back to quality family interaction is a high priority.

Most new homes are now built with the family, dining and kitchen areas all attached, meaning that separation from privacy in the bedroom to social time with the family is clear. A recent trend has seen multiple living zones become of great importance in the family home that often sees alfresco entertaining areas included in new home designs that seek to combine inside/outside entertaining areas.

House and land package designs tend to range from smaller; 12-15 square, 3 bedroom properties, right up to large 40+ square, 4 bedroom plus study homes to cover the needs of most. However, with many of the house and land packages geared towards families, builders designing new homes also take into consideration factors such as accessibility of local schools, shops, public transport and access to major roads and freeways as well as the safety and security of the area and accessibility to hospitals and healthcare facilities. All this means you can buy with the confidence that every care has been taken to make your new home the perfect environment for raising a family.
