Martin Luther King once stated, "I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character." This is so very true because it is very challenging to raise a happy, healthy child. The more challenging it can become it is also one of the most rewarding experiences ever. All of us have that push inside us to raise our kids the right way but when it comes to practicality we fail. What is the reason behind this failure and what are the ways in which we can achieve our goal? Let's discuss more about them in detail.

The foremost problem is that we lack focus when it comes to parenting and we tend to follow the age old techniques which our elders followed to raise a child. Did you know that this is one area in social science that has been researched the most? The secret of good parenting is to provide an environment filled with kindness, acceptance and empathy where the flow should be in such a way that the own consequences of a child's behavior should do the teaching. Wrong parenting can sometimes take away the chances of a child to make his or her own decisions in life. The first step is to prioritize parenting and set an example for yourself for each and every single behavior of yours influences your child because he is learning from you. One thing that you need to remember is that you can never spoil a child by showing too much love. It only happens when love is misplaced with other feelings such as leniency, lowered expectations or by giving your child material possessions.

Children are capable of absorbing information just like sponges. Everything goes into them. It is left to us to control what's moral and what is immoral from going into their minds. Punishments are necessary but they have to solve the purpose. Children should understand the true meaning of punishments and why they are punished. You have to learn the art of punishing children with love. One has to be involved in parenting and it means prioritizing what you need to do. You should be able to sacrifice what you actually want to do in order for the child to do what she needs to. Develop the practice of reading to your child because if will help the child to develop an interest for reading later. Learn to communicate to children using character. They will never know what is right or wrong if you don't implement it yourself.

It is very easy for us to give long lectures and talk to our children. But we should know that listening is the toughest part of a conversation and active listening is an art in itself. We need to develop a ear to what they like to do and what they don't. It will be of great use in shaping up their character. One of the most dying traditions in America is the family dinner. This is one occasion where we get to pass on our values to our children. They will also learn discipline and manners while dining together. Family mealtime should be used as a time to communicate good values and ideas to children. We should also teach our children how to be safe and never try to raise them in a sterile atmosphere. In today's world security providers such as the ADT Home Security system make sure that all home security needs are met. Nevertheless it is our duty to teach them to be vigilant. Finally never reduce character education to your child to mere words but set an example yourself and always remember, " Children are the living messages we send to a time we will not see."
