Increase Personal Funds by Finding Unclaimed Assets by Nicole Anderson

Article published on June 4th 2012 | Home Business

For every 10 people, seven are eligible for unclaimed money in the U.S. With the initiatives of the government, most people are aware of unclaimed money in the U.S, and are trying their best to increase their income with unclaimed assets. Even after the several efforts of both state and federal governments, the pile of missing property is increasing at a fast rate.

The only resort to reduce it is by making people more and more aware about how they can increase their personal funds by claiming their unclaimed money. Unclaimed funds are nothing but the funds derived from dormant saving accounts, contents of security lockers, unclaimed insurance policies, unclaimed stocks, cash, dividends, gift certificates and money orders. People generally deal with most of the above-mentioned accounts in their life and it is hard to keep traces, especially when one moves residences or jobs often.

There are various reasons for having lost money with the government. If anyone is interested in increasing his or her own personal funds, one can initiate searching for missing money right now! Start searching for unclaimed property at federal government approved websites and government websites that allow searching unclaimed money for free. One can search for name by inserting name with initial on search bar. The search will provide all the prospective names and matches.

A claimant can also search money by inserting a name in different variations. The search will display the information related to the state and last address of claimant, along with the agency responsible for sending money to government custody. A person can also search for unclaimed assets under the name of a deceased relative if he thinks he is eligible to get their unclaimed property. To claim money successfully, a claimant has to provide information and documents such as name, address proof, phone number, a legal photo ID, and Social Security card.

Unclaimed funds can come in any source, which is why it is important for a person to keep an eye and ear open for news and updates regarding unclaimed money. Not only dormant saving accounts create unclaimed cash, but also insurance funds and ITR keep generating unclaimed money.

People should review their insurance policies and fill an income tax return regularly to earn extra money. Due to less knowledge about lost money, people do not come to claim their money and it remains idle in government accounts. By searching information on cash or gift certificates on one's name can increase personal funds.

A person can search for missing money related to savings bonds, payments for bank failures, damaged money, unclaimed credit union shares, government benefits, and unclaimed economic stimulus payments. Many elderly people forget to claim their pension benefits, which is worth around $27 million unclaimed in government account.

There are many different sources of unclaimed assets lying in the federal government accounts. To increase personal funds, the best way is by searching for unclaimed money. Finding unclaimed cash requires little knowledge and right approach to search the treasure.
