After Holiday Cleanings by Maids by Jonathan Jet

Article published on January 16th 2012 | Home Improvement

The new year is here and chances are, the house is probably a little messy from the holiday festivities. Before schedules get busy again, this can be a great time to clean up and get a fresh start for the new year. One way to do this, is to hire maids to clean the house completely, from top to bottom. There are some chores around a house that don't need to be done very often, so ask maids take this time to do every chore and save time later. After the entire house cleaning service is done, the cleaning will consist of smaller chores each week instead of larger spaces.

One problem many people have after the holidays is procrastinating. Taking down the tree and decorations is time-consuming and probably not half as fun as putting them up, but it has to be done. And, the sooner housekeeping services is done means that more enjoyable activities can be pursued. Some people prefer to leave decorations up until the New Year, but make it a priority to take down the tree by January second. If there are no plans New Year's Day, make that the time to get housekeeping services after the holidays. Usually people have the day off and many businesses are closed which means that most people will be staying at home, recovering from the previous night's festivities. Take a few hours to put away those decorations and start the New Year on a good note.

When putting away decorations, it's worth the time spent to put them away properly. It may be tempting to throw decorations in random boxes, but those actions will be regretted next year when taking them out again. Label boxes and make sure that each item goes into the correct box. This will save time next year and also decrease the overall stress level. Also, don't be afraid to throw out items that are rarely if ever used. If there are three angels for the tree, keep the most used one and donate the other two. Decorations can build up over the years, but it's important to not be overwhelmed.

The last part of post-holiday house cleaning service is figuring out what to do with the gifts. The ones that were given with good intentions, but will never receive any use. If possible, return them immediately. Many items go on sale after the holidays and a prompt return will mean the most credit at a store. If returning the item is not possible, donate it to a thrift store. It may not seem very nice, but chances are, the item will sit around the house and then be thrown away otherwise. Choose a day to organize donations from all members of the family and then make one big trip. This will be much easier than going several times during the year. These are a few tips for post-holiday cleaning. Don't put off these chores and start the new year with a clean and clutter-free house. This will help start the New Year in the right frame of mind.
