Basic Window Coverings for Your Philadelphia Home by Roxie Tenner

Article published on May 29th 2012 | Home Improvement

When you were in college and lived in your pint-sized dorm or apartment, you probably kept the sunlight out by taping newspapers over the windows, hanging a towel over the curtain rod or simply moving your bed to the corner away from the window. However, now that you have your own home that needs to look pleasing and cozy for your family and guests, newspapers and towels are out of the question. Itâ€™s time to get proper window coverings that suit your taste and go well with your Philadelphia home.

Window coverings are materials used to control the amount of sunlight that enters your home and also function to provide a degree of protection against draft or dust from the outside. Having the right window coverings can grant you significant energy savings. Other purposes of window coverings are to maintain privacy and give an aesthetic appeal to a house. The type of covering you can use for your Philadelphia home depends on the size of your windows, your homeâ€™s architectural style and your budget. Here are some commonly used window coverings:

Shutters

Shutters can both be decorative and practical in purpose. They can be made from a variety of materials, including steel, vinyl, plastic, metal and wood. Shutters can either be installed in the interior or exterior of your home. If your home has a cottage, rustic or country style of architecture, placing shutters over your windows can create an attractive effect that can make people in your neighborhood stop, stare and smile in appreciation.

Blinds

When it comes to blinds Philadelphia homeowners have a variety of styles and types to choose from. There is Persian, Venetian, vertical, mini, micro and pleated blinds to name a few. Each is great in managing the effects of sunlight, keeping unwelcomed insects out of your house and providing additional insulation during warm or cold weather. They are usually made of vinyl, fabric and wood.

Curtains and Drapes

Nothing can be as ordinary as using curtains or drapes to cover your windows. Most curtains Philadelphia windows are adorned with are of varying types of fabric and thickness. If you live in an area where it is harshly cold during winter, thicker curtains help a lot in minimizing air draft and heat loss to make your home more warm and cozy. Sheer or thin curtains are better suited for warmer seasons such as spring or summer.

If asked about the difference between drapes and curtains Philadelphia residents might say that theyâ€™re the same thing. Technically, drapes are long, lined and heavy window coverings whereas curtains are lighter or thinner. To read more about window coverings, you may visit homeguide123.com.
