Doors and Windows for the Modern Home by Professional Carpenter

Article published on February 15th 2012 | Home Improvement

When planning your home it is essential to take note of door and window positions and to choose the best design to suit the floor plan. Since space is often at a premium, choosing the types of doors that allow the best use of available space is a wise decision. Most doors need space to operate and this takes away from the use of the wall space that they swing back against.

However, when you choose cavity sliding doors you will find that the door can be opened without using up any of the surrounding space. Cavity sliding doors perth simply disappear into the wall cavity as they slide open. This allows you to place furniture up against the wall right to the door opening if necessary. You can hang pictures or mirrors on the wall where the door would otherwise be. There is no need to keep the floor space near the door free for it to swing so the design of the room can be enhanced and good use made of all available space.

Of course, all modern and older homes should have security doors perth fitted to external doorways. It is a sad fact of life that security doors are needed to keep homes safe in this day and age. In fact, many insurance companies will not pay up after a break-in unless security doors were fitted. In a house, the security doors are usually mesh with a grille of metal so that they can be used as flyscreens as well as security doors.

In apartments there is less need for flyscreen or grille doors and security doors are usually those with an eye hole so that the resident can view who is at the door before they open up. Additionally, such doors are usually fitted with chain restrainers so that the door can only be opened a fraction until the chain is removed from the inside.

Most modern homes these days have aluminium windows installed. Aluminium windows perth give a sleek contemporary look to all homes and having them installed saves a great deal of painting.
