Article published on January 4th 2012 | Home Improvement

Starting a new cafÃ© or bistro usually entails a lot of hard work and the failure rate is quite high, owing to initial costs and the difficulties experienced when trying to attract new customers. Give the financial pressures that owners have to deal with, especially in the beginning, it is not surprising that the vast majority are keen to find tables and chairs that will last for many years, whether they are looking for basic bar furniture or upmarket bistro banquettes. Buying durable pieces can help to avoid the need to spend even more money shortly after opening.

Suppliers of what is known in the industry as contract furniture are usually the best option when looking for items that are not only stylish but will withstand the kind of abuse they will be subjected to in commercial hospitality environments. Price is obviously a crucial factor to consider when sourcing new furnishings but the build quality of each item is equally important, as particularly well made pieces could save you money in the future. Most makers of restaurant furniture are willing to negotiate the price for large orders so it is worth contacting a few to see how far they are prepared to go to secure your custom, before making a decision as to which one to use.

If you are employing an interior designer to help you to create a pleasant environment in which your customers can enjoy a meal or a refreshing drink, it is obviously vital to consult them when choosing chairs, stools and tables for your establishment. However, it is important to bear in mind that you need to choose cafÃ© and hotel furniture that fits your budgetary and longevity requirements, so do not let your designer get carried away and persuade you to buy luxury items that will not last.

If your establishment is located in a major city then it is quite likely that there are a number of suppliers in the surrounding area from which you can choose. Alternatively, you could spend some time searching online as many companies are happy to arrange delivery to most parts of the United Kingdom and you might find that their products are more competitively priced than those that are on offer in your area.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/home-improvement-articles/finding-restaurant-furniture-that-lasts.htm - Article Side

Evan Holden - About Author:
Inside Out Contract
a Restaurant Furniture

Article Keywords:
Restaurant furniture

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!