Home Maintenance: Taking Care of the Roof of Your Home by Gabrielle Jeromy

Article published on June 6th 2012 | Home Improvement

On November 30, 1954, a woman was just sleeping on her couch in her Alabama home as an 8.5 pound meteorite was hurtling towards her home. The space rock crashed through her roof and struck her on the hip. While she received some bruises, she didn't get any serious damage. It is said that this is the first record in modern history of this kind of incident.

While the chances of getting hit by a meteorite is quite slim, falling debris on roofs are more likely to happen, potentially causing injuries or property damage. A badly neglected roof won't be strong enough to withstand falling branches and other debris, especially during bad weather conditions.

Even the sturdiest roof won't last long without proper care, so performing regular maintenance is a must to extend its service life. Regular maintenance helps spot minor signs of damage, preventing them from turning into a major problem.

Homeowners are advised to check their roof yearly. Some signs of roofing damage that homeowners have to look out for include missing or cracked parts, moss growth, holes, and faded paint. The flashing should also be checked to make sure that it is still sealed.

If your house has a tree next to it, it's important to trim branches that are making contact with the roof of your house. These branches can scratch the material if it keeps growing, making it more vulnerable to other kinds of damage. The roof should always be free of debris such as leaves, twigs and others. If gutters are clogged with twigs and leaves, water might accumulate and cause rust or mold formations. To make sure that your roof is thoroughly checked, you can contact a New Jersey roofing company for help.

If you're getting help from a professional, you must make sure that you're hiring a reliable NJ roofing company that can spot even the slightest sign of damage. Otherwise, some problems may go unnoticed. Imagine thinking your roof is 100% fine, only to end up trying to deal with dozens of leaks the next time it rains.

Taking care of your roof with the help of roofing NJ companies is important for your protection. Setting the idea falling meteorites aside, your roof will stay in good shape if you are conscious of roofing maintenance, repair and replacement issues.
