Home Renovation: Giving Your House a Total Make-over by Louie Cunningham

Article published on July 6th 2012 | Home Improvement

Do you find your house getting more dull and boring from day to day? Maybe itâ€™s time to consider a home renovation. With the spruce up, you may opt to follow the latest trend in the market for a total mood makeover, or turn in the look youâ€™ve been mulling for a long time. Either way, the successful revamp increases the value of your home for future sale.

In the United States, residential or home renovation is a 300 billion-dollar industry. The whopping number proves remodeling isnâ€™t entirely fallow is these hard-up times. Homeowners find ways to dwell in a space both aesthetically pleasing and functioning. Their responsible upkeep ensures that their home, if nothing else in their life, stands sturdy and steady over their heads.

Under dire economic circumstances, selling your home that youâ€™ve renovated allows you to reclaim at least 80-90% of what youâ€™ve invested. But on average in a good market, that is, under normal conditions, property investments increase and relevant home repairs and improvements significantly boost the value of your home.

You canâ€™t go wrong investing a good part of your renovating funds on kitchens and bathrooms. Buyers make an intuitive decision on whether they like your home or not by the appeal or dreariness of these rooms. For this reason, baths and kitchens are the most expensive parts to renovate. Some potential buyers even make a spot-on offer to buy the house based on the look of these rooms and the emotional appeal the rooms evoked in them.

Major renovation isnâ€™t the place and time for your do-it-yourself inclination. Even among contractors in the industry, you shouldnâ€™t put your trust on just anybody. Start with certified and licensed contractors to do the job. If youâ€™re looking for Cape Cod home renovations, one of the most popular house plans in the US, choose a company that offers information about the range of Cape Cod homes styles with photo colors of interiors and exteriors, floor plan modifications, information offered for free in your consult.

A Cape Cod house renovation is undertaken only by skilled and experienced craftsmen on the field. Many experienced contractors usually offer a fraction of the cost of your customized house plan, including free plan revision consultation and free house plan modification estimates.

For a total make-over of the interior and exterior curb appeal, hire only dependable Cape Cod renovation services. Many Cape Cod house plans are expandable, where sections of the second floor are left unfinished, and then remodeled and completed when needed.
