Kitchen handles and knobs can become your go-to detail when it comes to giving your cooking space a fresh, new look. Specialty stores have different collections available grouped by style and what they are made of. You may find that these simple details can inspire a big change in cabinet presentation.

Find a new style that could replace your existing hardware without a lot of fuss for a low-hassle overhaul. A simple metal style for drawer pulls, for example, may offer some shine and sparkle. You could go for an entirely new approach, such as using glass or ceramic models, to add color and details where there were none before in your cooking zone.

When you are thinking of changing out hardware, consider your current versions so that a replacement fits the existing cabinetry properly. Switching from a style such as a handle to a smaller knob may work, but it might also leave behind marks from the previous hardware. Consider modifications that you may need to make, or stick with a similar style to cover up where the previous model existed.

A new look can stem from an entirely different line of hardware for your cabinetry. You could replace metal or wood versions, for example, with ceramic that includes tiny flowers in its painted design. Look at glass options in various colors, which can bring a dramatically different type of style to a set of cabinets.

Seemingly fragile types of hardware actually may be just as sturdy as the current versions used in your home. Glass varieties generally include an acrylic coating to add protection from daily use to keep them looking their best. Consider all kinds of styles for form and functionality if you are going for a complete overhaul of how the cabinets look.

When you are shopping for new cabinet fixtures, you can explore what other elements in the room could complement your new hardware to help draw attention to a distinctive new style. These stores also may sell items such as switch plates that could match your purchase. This type of detailing can help introduce a subtle new look to the entire room along with the cabinetry details.

Once you have the new cabinet fixtures in place, you may want to go beyond basic changes and aim for making more bold design statements that include the whole room. You can think about repainting the area, or possibly adding new window treatments that can work to tie the room together. You can base these new ideas on the colors found in your new handles, for example, to add some pop to the entire look.

Kitchen handles and knobs can inspire you to make more dramatic changes to your cooking area. Think about colors and styles, and then use your imagination to find ways that other detailing elements can work together. You may discover that a new look is easy to obtain with some simple planning and changes made in phases.
