Loft conversions St Albans: Different options by Mary Porter

Article published on June 21st 2012 | Home Improvement

It is no wonder that so many UK homeowners opt for loft conversions St Albans â€“ they are a superb way of adding functionality (not to mention substantial value) to your property. Whether it is done on a converted farmhouse in the South of France or a semi-detached suburban dwelling in the North of England a loft conversion St Albans can make a tremendous difference to a home. However you have to consider which one of the loft conversions St Albans is more suitable for you...

One of the more common styles of Loft conversions St Albans is the Velux type. This involves the installation of specific types of windows into the existing roofline without any change being made to the shape of the existing roof. Luckily in these cases planning permission is very rarely required due to the fact the roofline is not being altered. These loft conversions St Albans are also ideal for those working on a tight budget.

Rear dormer loft conversions St Albans are the most common types of conversion invested in by homeowners. Typically a large dormer â€“ a flat roofed â€˜corner pieceâ€™ â€“ is added to the back of a property. Usually this is accompanied by Velux-style alterations to the slope at the front of the house in question. Thus a large area of flat ceiling on the inside of loft conversions St Albans is created. This is most common when it comes to terraces, end-of-terrace and semi-detached homes. Rear dormer loft conversions St Albans require more paperwork and are more expensive but create ample room so are preferable for many people.

Who are the best providers of loft conversions St Albans has to offer?
