Making Your Roof Stand Out: Steps in Choosing the Right Color by Norbert Floth

Article published on February 17th 2012 | Home Improvement

Unlike other parts of the home, your roof is something that wouldn't go unnoticed. Therefore, if you plan to change the look of your roof, here are some of the things you might want to consider.

The overall design and color play a major role in deciding on roof color. Home exteriors like the sidings, walls, and other accents should also be considered so that they will complement the color of the roof. Looking at the home in different angles is also helpful to see if the color would work well on your home. Aside from these, the size of your home also matters. For instance, if you want to make your home look bigger and taller, then you can choose colors that would match the siding and trims of the home.

With so many colors to choose from, it can be a confusing task to choose one that would really please the eyes. What you can do to avoid confusion is to make a color palette of all the colors you'll most likely choose. As much as possible, avoid monotonous color tones and stick to different shades that would make your roof stand out.

Although you want to make your home unique from the others in your neighborhood, it would be wise to stay at the safe side. Choose a color that would complement the other homes and the entire terrain of your vicinity. For instance, if you live near the beach, vibrant colors would be suitable for your roof. However, if your home is situated near lush forests and mountains, Atlanta painting experts would advise the use of earth colors.

High quality paint is essential to keep the roof protected. Acworth roofing experts might help you choose paint that would work well with your home. For instance, if your home is located in an area with high rate of rain and snow, then you need to choose water-resistant paint. Otherwise, you need to choose one that wouldnâ€™t chip off easily due to extreme heat. It is also prudent to choose paint that can help insulate the home to your home's utility costs. Dark colors, for instance, are helpful in absorbing and retaining heat in your home.

Although painting the roof can be a do-it-yourself project, getting assistance from Atlanta roofing contractors is advisable. For one, they can help inspect the roof for signs of damage and make necessary repairs that you've missed. Aside from that, it is safer to paint the roof with professional assistance rather than do it alone.
