Seamless Installation of Tiles for Your House: a Simple Guide that You Can Use by Alana Geikie

Article published on March 9th 2012 | Home Improvement

You can find proof of how durable tiles are in the ancient Roman homes that still have their tile flooring in a pristine state.

If youâ€™re planning to install tiles on your own or if it's your first time to do so, you have to learn the right methods in tile installation. It is not as uncomplicated as it seems, so make sure you also have all the necessary materials ready before you begin. Listed here are the steps for a good quality tile installation.

Prep work. Prior to setting up your first tile, you must plan a layout that boost the number of whole tiles and reduce the use of cut tiles. Make a dry layout, putting all the whole and cut tiles on top to see if they fit. Soon after, ensure that the surface exactly where you'll install your tiles is effectively cleansed and free from any humps. Scrape away any dirt and grime. Wipe away dust with a wet cloth and let it dry thoroughly. Next, mix an adequate quantity of thinset mortar. It truly is advisable that you use a latex additive instead of water to ensure that the tiles can have a solid base to bond on.

Set up. Press the mortar towards the surface to be tiled using a trowel. Distribute the mortar over the space in lengthy, even strokes. Bear in mind that the width of your mortar depends on the size of the tiles. A small tile will call for a mortar width that matches its own, while a big Provenza tile would only require mortar that is half as thick.

Put the tile squarely onto the mortar with your fingertips. Push it down with a little twist of your wrist. Repeat this method accordingly for each tile or tile sheet. Be extra cautious when you are installing small tiles like the Vetro glass tile. Ensure that you apply consistent pressure for each tile to stay away from getting misaligned tile levels. When all of the tiles are in place, let them set overnight.

Polishing. After the tiles have been set, remove any mortar from the tile surface and joints. Whether you are working with Vetro glass tiles or any type of tile, it truly is essential that all of the mortar is taken out to help keep your work clean. Mix a batch of grout and apply it onto the spaces between the tiles utilizing a trowel. When applying grout, you need to start from the end of the room towards the center. Allow it to dry for thirty minutes, and then wash any unwanted grout with a wet sponge or cloth.
