Article Side

Solid oak furniture: Durable furniture for your home by Jacob Caden

Article published on July 19th 2012 | Home Improvement

Oak is one of the most popular timbers used in the furniture industry. Solid oak furniture pieces are elegant and stylish. In a reputed furniture outlet, you will find a wide selection of exclusive oak furniture designed for every room of a house.

Why choose solid oak furniture

Oak is one of the most expensive timbers used for constructing furniture. Solid oak furniture pieces, extensively used in English homes in the 17th and 18th century, survived for several generations. You will find some of the exquisite antique furniture pieces crafted from oak in antique shops and auction houses throughout the country. It is always advisable to invest in solid oak chairs and tables than buying a cheaper substitute that is less durable than the real wooden furniture pieces.

Types of solid oak furniture

A variety of furniture is available for every room of the house. There are magnificently sofas and coffee tables crafted from oak that can be used for adorning the living areas of your house. In the dining space, you need sturdy and durable furniture that can last for decades. Here oak dining table and chairs will add a sophisticated touch to the room. King sized beds made out of oak will enhance the appearance of your bedroom. Oak is one of the finest timbers for constructing furniture pieces for childrenâ€™s rooms or nursery, capable of withstanding rough handling.

Care for oak furniture

Even a durable timber such as oak needs proper care to last for generations. Oak furniture is available either treated or untreated. Treated oak is sturdier and more durable than its untreated counterpart is. They are primarily used as outdoor furniture. They can last for several years with minimal care. Nonetheless, both types of oak furniture need appropriate care to retain their appearance. Regular dusting is sufficient for keeping the furniture free from dust. Tannin staining is a common problem in oak furniture. The tannin present in the wood oozes to the surface, leaving unsightly stains around the furniture. Staining is more common in untreated oak furniture. To retard staining, the furniture pieces, especially the untreated ones, must be wiped with high-grade teak oil. In the absence of teak oil, a suitable substitute would be Danish oil. It also helps to retain the natural appearance and finish of the timber. Oak furniture, just as any other wooden furniture, should not be exposed to high levels of h umidity and extreme temperature changes.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/home-improvement-articles/solid-oak-furniture-durable-furniture-for-your-home.htm - Article Side

Jacob Caden - About Author:
Welcome to Oak - One of the UK's leading suppliers of quality a oak furniture for your home. We make every effort to a solid oak furniture to supply our contemporary oak range a Oak Dining Furniture.

Article Keywords:
oak furniture, oak dining furniture, solid oak furniture

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!