Stone Paving with Cheap Paving Slabs by Stone Seller

Article published on June 19th 2012 | Home Improvement

The process of stone paving is one that is incredibly simple, depending on the amount of stone that needs to be paved and how large the area is. Simple research will teach any person how to do stone paving with cheap paving slabs. The advantage of using cheap paving slabs is that it ultimately doesnâ€™t cost you an arm or a leg, but the appearance and quality aren't diminished just because of the price.

Materials You Will Need to Start Stone Paving

Obviously, the first material you will need are the paving slabs or commonly known as pavers. The process of selecting the right pavers that will fit into your lifestyle is important, and it should be a decision that is completely thought-out because once the pavers are set and put into place, itâ€™ll become harder to alter them. Another vital element you will need is the base material, which can be coarse gravel or sand. It really depends on your personality. Other materials include: stakes, string, a level, measuring tape, stone cutter, a plate compactor and eye protection.

Things to Consider Before Stone Paving

If you are choosing cheap paving slabs, then remember to use the money saved in another area of the project. Itâ€™s suggested that you do this simply because the paving slabs are cheaper, so you may need to spend more on a good base material. Purchasing cheap paving slabs isnâ€™t necessarily bad because in all honesty, the appearance or overall quality of them isnâ€™t bad; however, there may be certain components that are missing that would be commonly found in the more expensive paving slabs, like special aging bonds.

As mentioned previously, selecting paving slabs is a process that should be met with seriousness. Once the slabs are set into the base material and are aligned, it does become harder to freely move or adjust them, so you need to make sure you are content with the selection of slabs you have chosen. A great way to see if the selected paving slabs are acceptable is to lay them down on the ground and let them stay there for about a week or so.

Stone paving, although it sounds relatively difficult, really isnâ€™t and could be done on a weekend. Professionals are able to complete the task for you if you are not comfortable doing it, and the costs do vary when it comes to stone paving; however, you can decrease the cost by using cheap paving slabs, but again, you may want to spend that extra money on a good base material. Either way, be sure to select attractive and durable paving slabs and just have fun with this project.
