Tips for packing glassware while shifting

When you are packing glassware and your kitchen dishes, exercise extra caution as these are most prone to chipping. Packing such dishes might be time consuming, but it is not all that difficult once you learn the knack. Before you set yourself for packing, the things that will be required would be cell, cardboard boxes, Styrofoam pellets, packing paper or newsprint paper, tape for packing, scissors Permanent marker and glue just in case.

Packing correctly

The first step that goes into process is the exact box to put all dishes in. The cardboard or any other box will come into work till time it is sturdy and can withstand pressure. Such boxes are available in market but make sure that before buying them you need to be sure that they are durable and free of any bugs and pests.

The second phase is to make use of the newsprint or packing paper, these acts as a better shock absorber than a sheet of paper. They are normally crumpled and placed at the bottom of the box which acts like a sponge thus preventing the glassware from hitting the floor.

The third phase is to pack the dish, keep the utensil at the middle of the packing sheet. Take few sheets of the paper and cover the dish with it. Now place another dish above the first one and then wrap it few more sheets. Make sure that you use maximum sheets to ensure better protection. Once you are done with it, take the tape and secure the wrapped dishes well. Carry this activity until all the dishes, glassware, silverware, casserole and other glass items are safely secured.

The fourth step is to stuff loads of paper over the top, similar to the one you did it on the bottom, and then close the flaps, securing them tight with the tape. Bear in mind that these are delicate household items which must be stacked on top of others. Reduce stuffing within the box and make enough room to stuff them with wads of paper.

The fifth step is to use the permanent marker by writing on the box denoting it with names such as "Fragile" and "This side up" or with some other labels.

If you plan ahead of time, packing dishes would be done without much pressure. These are certain beneficial steps which are similarly handled by the best packers and movers in India. So, if you need their help they would be present if not self done work can also be quite effective.
