Nice story about a guy taking his family on a caravan holiday. Anyway the family, wife and three kids, are camped in a local nature reserve but decide to go into town for a burger meal. A pleasant evening is had and they return to the Park at 10:30 pm only to realize that they had locked the keys of the trailer inside. Oh dear, panic, knock up the grumpy management office who eventually finds the phone number of the local locksmith. He eventually arrives, having got out of bed to come, at about 11:45. He is carrying a great big bunch of master keys and with a bit of fiddling opens the door to the van in a couple of minutes.

He turns to the guy and says "That will be $200 please". "What," says the guy, "you were only here 5 minutes".

Without saying another word the locksmith slams the door of the caravan and goes home.

The moral of that story is straightforward. One never knows when one is going to have a key problem, when you are locked out and have no other option but to call out a locksmith. One can be almost certain that it is going to be at a most inconvenient moment when one is in a rush, or it is late and cold. Whenever it happens then you are going to be awfully glad that there is a professional on call with the knowledge and the dedication to coming and sorting your problem out for you.

Consider the automobile. Many modern cars have an electronic key for the ignition but most are still using regular keys for the trunk and doors. If, as happened recently, one gets out the car and lifts a heavy box out of the trunk after having carefully put your keys on something else in the trunk which you wish to come back for later. But your wife doesn't realize that and slams the trunk shut and now you are locked out of your auto, the trunk and you are stuck with this heavy box what are you to do? That's right, Call a local locksmith who will come and open for you. Because it is in regular business hours and the locksmith did not have far to come this guy was only charged $65. And the locksmith was in fact only there for 3 minutes.

In every city in the land there will be locksmith services and so a Phoenix Locksmith will be no surprise to find. But they are there and they promise to deliver a professional service with whatever is required. Servicing Scottsdale, Phoenix and both the East and the West Valley, these guys are on hand for whatever kind of locksmith job it is that is required.

From Automotive where a new key will often have a transponder or another type of high security key, to the commercial and domestic requirements which may entail door locks or even safe keys they may be called for a prompt and professional service.
