Article published on January 19th 2012 | Home Improvement

When you are looking for a reputable company to help you move into your new home, it helps to do some research on the companies you are considering. After all, you do not want to trust just anyone to do the job right. You want to hire the services of a moving company that actually knows how to protect your belongings, and move them safely. Finding out about other people's experiences with the company can be an excellent way to get the inside scoop on the company you are thinking about hiring.

Trustworthy Reviews Are On the Web

If you type in moving reviews on any search engine, you are going to get back many results. Some sites focus on moving in general and message boards and comments sections are filled with the experiences of people who have used different companies. Some sites are more specific to moving reviews. You can simply browse through lists of companies they have reviews for, and read what other people had to say. The companies with the most reviews are generally the most well known, national companies. However, when people take the time to write an online review on a service, they were either very impressed or had a terrible experience. Things you definitely want to know.

Ask Friends and Family

Everyone has moved at some point in their lives, and you might be able to ask friends and family what movers they recommend or do not recommend, and get some important feedback that will help you when choosing your moving company. After all, no one forgets a bad experience with a mover, and your friends and family will not hesitate to be honest on their moving experiences.

Ask Your Real Estate Agent

If you are moving to a new town or city, your real estate agent works with people who are moving to a new location every day. It is likely that they have noticed inside information from their clients about which movers are professional and do an excellent job and which ones get the most complaints. A word of mouth review is powerful, and generally trustworthy. In addition, your real estate agent has a stake in being as helpful and valuable resource as he or she can, since she too is depending on a good review from you.

When you are moving, it's important that all your belongings arrive safe and sound so make sure you find trustworthy moving reviews. In addition, if you have the time, check multiple sources. Ask friends and family, search the web message boards, forums, company websites and blogs, and ask your real estate agent, too. Finding the right moving company is important and you want to make sure you are trusting the things that make your house a home to people who are reputable, reliable, respectful, and trustworthy. In addition, if you have an exceptional experience with your moving company, whether good or bad, take a few minutes after you are settled in and give that company an online review.
