Some of us cannot but drive rash. And some of us, even when we know it is illegal, care two hoots about it and drive under the influence of alcohol. And some of us are unlucky enough to be caught on only that when we had that extra beer and were driving home. The state takes such instances very seriously and labels us as high risk drivers. We are assessed for three years and let go after that. Moreover, we are also required to be covered under high risk auto insurance and/or DUI insurance. These are commonly known as SR22 insurance.

The concept of high risk auto insurance and DUI insurance is very simple. Our auto insurance company needs to notify the Department of Motor Vehicles that we are covered under SR22 insurance. The DMV will otherwise not let us drive. And once we are covered under SR22 insurance, we need to maintain it for a period of three years. If the insurance cover is cancelled within these three years or lapses for some reason, your right to drive is revoked by the DMV. The only solution here is to get covered under a new SR22 insurance and pay a penalty to have our driving rights restored.

It is very dangerous to ignore high risk auto insurance and DUI insurance. The state keeps extra special tab on people that are covered under SR22 insurance. Even a minor error during the three years of being covered under SR22 insurance could result in harsh penalties. Hence, if there is a need for you to take up high risk auto insurance or DUI insurance you should be very prompt about it.
