Concepts for Renovating Your Bathroom at an Affordable Cost by Eric Blair

Article published on January 23rd 2012 | Interior Design

Before you go off to work, the first place you go to is the bathroom to get ready. It is one of the most vital rooms inside your home because itâ€™s the one area which you will find yourself using daily. You might have taken a look around your bathroom and identified the poor shape the paint is in or the broken down shower head that barely sprays out water, and you may be wanting to upgrade this bathroom. If color and a different style is what youâ€™re looking to include in a bathroom, you can scrape by with little money while still giving your washroom the new style you seek by simply repainting or adding a couple of decorations.

Paint

You might have a shower area that scatters steam made by a hot shower poorly, and if thatâ€™s the case, youâ€™re looking at water circles staining your ceiling. When those water stains dry, black circles will be left behind because of the dirt seen on ceilings, and each time you look up, youâ€™ll see those stains covering the paint. You may not even have a little bathroom, but after five or six years, the paint will start to chip and white walls will look yellow, while colored walls will lose their luster. You can strip the paint chips, fading color and black water stains with a quick, do-it-yourself renovation by repainting the room with a new coat of paint to add life back into your washroom. The new paint job can open up new avenues for placing different decorations; for instance, a brown painted bathroom might go better with a set of white mirrors you recently purchased.

Decorations

When individuals go into a restroom with multiple small decorations, they are greeted by the colorful images, while if they step into a bathroom with no decorations, they are received by colorless walls. Tiny decorations can range from artwork to average-sized ornaments that can be placed on the wall. If you put up nothing, people will notice, and any decoration, no matter how large or small, will help add some color and liveliness to a restroom.

Small Mirrors

Combined with the small decorations, decorative wall mirrors add light and color into a bathroom, providing the ideal item for redecorating. If your bathroom has mirrors inside, you might contemplate some new styles and shapes, as the ones you currently may have may not be huge enough or may have paint stains or cracks. Mirrors are wonderful because they can work as standalone decoration products and are affordable, especially online.
