There is one thing that many job seekers neglect to do, create an extensive online portfolio. Regardless whether or not the actual process of being hired is quite different on the net than that of traditional job interviews, you still need to be able to showcase your skills and experiences with an impressive online resume. Most of the top paying telecommuting based companies will require that you submit a resume via email or fax, or that you have one published online that they can review. If you are serious about landing the highest paying job offers online, you need to represent yourself as a true professional. In this article we will discuss about the importance and a few things to keep in mind when creating your resume.

You should first avoid unwanted time gaps on your resume. Even if you are new to working from home, you want to ensure that your resume is as complete as possible and leaves no long term gaps in employment. Include every position you have ever had, even offline ones as they are still very important in showcasing your skills and indicating to potential employers that you are a capable employee and surely prove as an asset to the company.

Take your time to clearly showcase your online skills. Regardless of the position you are applying for, be sure to emphasize the different skills that you have that would come in handy when working online. This includes your ability to organize, schedule, follow time management schedules, meet deadlines, communicate efficiently and be reliable. You want to give employers the impression that you are a trustworthy, disciplined employee who will be able to work at home, unsupervised and still get the job done. Big companies are very cautious in choosing their external associates or employees, hence you should ensure that you have provided all the information that they need to choose you.

Do not forget to include your computer savvy talents. If you are experienced using Word or Excel, include this on your resume as well as any other specific skills you have in regards to online navigation or computer usage. The more seasoned you appear, the more likely that you will be considered for the job above those who have little or no computer knowledge. If you are a speedy typist, include your word per minute average, if you are good with graphic design programs such as Photoshop or Fireworks, include that as well. The ultimate purpose is to put yourself ahead of competition.

Make sure that you proofread your resume and have a friend or family member look it over so that you can work towards tweaking and improving every element of your resume. It is truly one of the most important aspects to being able to land the highest paying job offers online. No matter what type of job you seek online, but if you are very serious about signing up only with right companies that really pays then you should primarily concentrate in building your online exposure. The more impressive your portfolio is the more chance you get to be hired by a genuine company. Good Luck
