How to find the Best VPN services by Jack Hauck

Article published on December 21st 2011 | Internet

First of all, you want to find the best VPN services have server flexibility and a large number of servers around the world. In other words, if one server is busy, you have the option to switch to another server. A decent number of VPN servers is somewhere north of three servers per location. For example, if you are interested in accessing US and UK content, you probably want to have at least three servers in the UK and three servers in the US. This is not very hard to find since most good providers will provide this.

Second, you will find the best VPN services are easy to switch between servers without capping the number of time you switch or the number of servers you are trying to access. There are some VPN services that actually cap which servers you can access. There are some VPN services that limit the number of times you switch between servers. This can be an issue if you are trying to switch access between US-based content and then trying to access UK-based content. Once again, do your research for the best VPN services.

Customer service is crucial to finding the best VPN services because you want one which has 24/7 customer service and thatâ€™s friendly and customized to your needs. Make sure you find a service that is reputable for customer service. As most of us are not technical gurus, you will definitely want to find a service that is able to respond to your needs and also get you the technical help you will need. If you want, try sending the best VPN services an e-mail to see if theyâ€™re able to get back to you within several hours.

Next, the best VPN services have reasonable pricing. If you go for a very low priced service, youâ€™ll find that the servers are slow and always congested. At the same time, you donâ€™t want to be paying $15/month for the best VPN services.

As always, try before you buy is the advice we always tell people. If you have a service which does not allow you to try the service, stay away. They are probably a scam or they have poor service quality.

In conclusion, finding the best VPN services is not hard. You just need to do your research and be prepared to walk away.
