Web Glossary: Explaining Internet Words in Simplest Way by Shaly Criston

Article published on January 23rd 2012 | Internet

In every field of work there are jargons which are being used by people to communicate with each other. Through these words, they can recognize each other as if they are speaking the same language. With regards to the internet, since its invention, the people who are developing and using it have able to create words for their pleasure that an ordinary people will not understand. If you are not a technical person, more often than not, you will feel dumb with those you are encountering online. That is why, knowing all the words used online are really very important.

Survival Kit on the Internet

Fortunately, there are now sites these days that are offering web glossary service for people who want to familiarize themselves with all the jargons on the internet. Some may say that it is not a necessity to learn those words since they are just ordinary people. But professionals or not, even young and old are using the computer. Also, it is fact of life that most of our transactions are being done over the internet. Any mistake in comprehending the words from the person you are dealing with can create a major setback in your business. For example, your client is asking you to create â€œback linksâ€• so that the flow of your website traffic will not stop. Not knowing the meaning of this particular word can turn off your client and probably will consider pulling out the deal.

For those who are not working, they may say that they just use the internet for chatting with friends, sending emails, play, and watch online. However, what if someone ask you to download the PDF to see your childrenâ€™s test grade, without any knowledge of this word can result of you unable to open the file. Although it sounds like the internet is already too technical, you should not be despair because both words mentioned here are in the web glossary. Those words listed in sites offering glossaries are the most typical words you will encounter on the web. Usually, this service is being offered by blogs where a list of internet words is displayed on their pages. It may not contain all the words about the internet but it is a great help especially you do not have to do any search.

Advantage of Using the Glossary

Others may say that they will just use the search engine or an online internet dictionary to look for the meaning of the word. However, it is a fact that it is such a hassle doing searches on the internet with so many results being displayed on your screen. Also, the meaning of the web lingo is sometimes too technical that even if you already read the description still you are unable to understand the word. Unlike with words displayed on blogs, they make sure that the meaning is comprehensible and understandable by the commons. Anyway, this should be the primary goal of those people making a dictionary. Explain the words in the simplest form as much as possible.
