jewelry seekers can find a wide selection of Pandora Jewelry. This article will focus on Pandoraâ€™s concept of charm bracelets, taken to a more sophisticated level. Both young girls and grown women alike will find delight in a Pandora charm bracelet.

In the beginning, charms were worn as protection, or luck, for the person wearing them. Early charms were often just stones, pieces of wood, metals, and then eventually gems. These charms were believed to hold powers that would be passed into the owner when worn or carried with them.

This was quite a long time ago, somewhere in the Middle Ages. Then as time passed, we enter the 18th and 19th century, when Queen Victoria took to charm bracelets and made them a fashionable piece of jewelry, as she frequently wore small pictures of her family on bracelets.

Â After this, Victorian brides began bringing the luck of charms into their wedding day, attaching ribbon and charms on their cakes, and having their bridesmaids wear charms meant to represent the future. Charms were small, un-cumbersome, and attractive, and the fact that they were meant to provide protection and luck appealed to most everyone. Charms spread to being used as gold rings, for traveling, as babies shoes for the promise of children, and as lucky four-leaf clovers, for life.

Through World War II and the passage of time, young women began consistently wearing charms in the 1950s as reminders of their men who had returned home from Europe. More time helped to evolve the charm bracelet trend, and soon mothers were passing them down to their daughters, symbolically. Now charm bracelets are perfect for any occasion, to show concern for the person who wears them. Pandora jewelry was created to make these charms into something sophisticated for everyone to enjoy.
