Benefits of Role Playing Games for Kids by Osa Webmasterone

Article published on December 29th 2011 | K-12 Education

We learn things by observing and practicing it. We can often notice our kids to copy us in our day to day life activities. It is a usual tendency among all kids to act like the elders. They want to feel the freedom that the elder members of the family enjoy. The kids express their feelings often through the medium of playing games. Being parents, we always want to nurture good habits and character in our kids. There are various ways of nurturing this habit and one of the means is by engaging the kids in role playing games. The role playing activity has multiple benefits to offer to the kids. Apart from inculcating good habit among kids, these activities also make the kids aware of the day to day activities and the world around them. It is a group activity where different kids play different roles. The modern day preschools are also including these activities in the school curriculum. Education is all about grooming up kids to be a potent individual, capable of fighting with every situation in life. Thus the schools are getting the kids engaged in such activities in a very early age.

In a learning environment role play can be a very flexible and effective tool. The tenet 'I hear and I forget I see and I remember, I do and I understand' is very applicable here. There are various reasons that increase the importance of role playing activities in the early childhood days. These are briefly discussed below:-

1-Each and every play requires creativity from the part of the gamer. The role playing game stimulates the senses and encourages the gamer to be creative in the approach. Those who get engage in such activities in a very early age, develop a strong sense of creativity in the later life

2-Problem solving skills can also be learnt from such activities. In this kind of games, the players come across various circumstances that occur in our day to day life. During the play, the player needs to tackle the situation and thus they develop problem solving skills gradually

3-As role playing is a group activity, it teaches the kids about how to work in a team. They develop leadership and belongingness through playing the game

4-It encourages the kids to develop a strong social network. It also teaches them the social norms of a particular society in which they are born

5-These activities engage the kids in a healthy way. It also helps in strengthening the bond between the parents, family members and the child. It is a great way to nurture a healthy relation by means of these games.

Since role playing games deal so much with the mind and imagination, it can be difficult to measure their benefits. With physical sports the results are easy to see, even with the naked eye: weight loss, increased coordination, and so on. But role playing games exercise thinking, reacting, verbal and mathematical skills, and teamwork that can be accomplished while everyone remains sitting.
