Good Manners: the Treasure for a Life Time by Harry Yadav

One fine summer morning a group of young boys went to the nearby park to spend some time. They noticed that it was so clean that even a needle in the ground could be visible from a distance. There were hardly a few people apart from them. After spending some time in the park, the boys saw a park cleaner come by, singing and dancing as he swept. It amused the group of boys to see how the cleaner was enjoying his work, especially when there was nothing to clean. The boys thought of giving the cleaner some work and began throwing bags and bits of paper on the ground.

As the day turned to noon, more people saw the boys throwing the garbage on the ground. They thought that the park authorities must have arranged for some fun. So they also started throwing the wastes on the ground. Within an hour the whole park became a garbage area. At first the cleaner thought he could clean the wastes, but as the whole park became untidy, so it became difficult for the cleaner to clean it up. When the boys realized their fault, they start helping the cleaner in cleaning the ground and within an hour the park got back its old beauty. It is well said by our elders that if a mistake is rectified early, we need not to suffer for that later in life. Our human life is like a garden.

Our elders are the caretakers of that garden. Parents, being the first guardians, try their best to beautify it. We are social beings and our life becomes worthy when we can give pleasure to others also. A smile or a little care can provide immense pleasure to others. People remember us not by our face, but by our behavior. Good manners are lifetime asset. The rewards of this asset are several and the cost is negligible. Apart from being nice to people, there are many things that come under good mannerisms. These are briefly discussed below:-

1. It is rightly said that charity begins at home. So kids should be taught to clean up their rooms and keep it tidy. This will develop a habit of self discipline to the kids

2. Kids often make their bathrooms untidy. This should be stopped, because it also counts in case of hygiene conditions. They must also learn to keep their surroundings clean

3. Before teaching kids good manners, parents should be a role model to them. Kids always learn from their parents and close ones; so this method can prove to be beneficial

4. Kids should learn how to respect the elders and also their friends and classmates. When we show respect to others, they also give us respect

5. We often behave roughly to our subordinates. This may have a negative impact on our kids. So parents should avoid such behaviors so that kids are taught to be polite to everyone

The golden rule for good manners is to feel the importance of treating others. So stress on the importance of treating others in the same way they would like to be treated.
