Baron and Budd is one of the most highly recognized and respected law firms across the nation. It has more than thirty years of experience upholding the rights of people who have been exposed to asbestos. The firm is known for its many historic cases, such as a case in 1985. The firm fought on behalf of the people of Tucson against an aircraft manufacturing company, Tucson Airport Authority, and the city of Tucson. The case took more than twenty years, but eventually the firm won the case and the city was properly compensated. Most importantly, their children and grandchildren will be protected from the contaminated drinking water that caused cancer and other diseases.

When it comes to asbestos exposure cases, this law firm has won some of the most significant cases across the country. In general, it has won hundreds of cases for more than three decades, for which it gained numerous national awards and recognition. They are also known for their collaborations with advocacy groups for public service. These are just some of the many examples of the dedication and kind of service the firm offers to their clients. Regardless of how long the cases take, there will always be expert lawyers to handle them. Serving the public, whether individually or as a group, is one of the major objectives of Baron and Budd, P.C.

John Langdoc, one of the leading trial lawyers of Baron and Budd, P.C., for example, worked as a scientist before becoming a lawyer. Currently he uses his knowledge of science and medicine in cases against companies that expose the public and their workers to contaminants and asbestos. John Langdoc is now one of the strongest forces of the firm since he has won some of the most significant asbestos exposure cases. One of these is the $20 million decision in favor of a woman who was exposed to cancerous material. Another one of his significant cases is a $12 million decision in favor of a man who was exposed to carcinogenic materials while working in a paper mill. John Langdoc is an experienced environmental and asbestos lawyer.
