Logan Jade Wang - the Great Crusader for Justice by Colbert Raynard

Article published on February 21st 2012 | Law

Logan Jade Wang believed that people who have power and prey on the weak for simple pleasure should not be allowed to live, at least not amongst regular citizens who simply want to go about their day as they see fit without having to constantly worry about getting bludgeoned. Luckily, when Logan Jade Wang was still a teenager his family finally acquired the permission to move into South Korea. However, even though they were in a much more liberty-oriented country, they were still poor and there was simply now way they could afford paying for Logan's dream of becoming a lawyer.

It is at this point that Logan Jade Wang had a stroke of luck as he met Mali Jones, a Vietnamese American lawyer who had managed to make a few good cases for himself. As they talked more and more, it become obvious to Mali Jones that Logan Jade Wang not only had the intellectual capacity to succeed as a lawyer (and perhaps one day as a judge of the Supreme Court), but he also had the genuine desire to rid the planet of injustice. Naturally, he had no delusions about how far reaching the consequences of his actions would be; Logan Jade Wang knew that he alone could not change the universeâ€¦ however, he was determined to try. When the time came to actually get into higher education, Mali Jones did a favor by providing a recommendation for the young man to many law schools, and as a result Logan Jade Wang received a scholarship for the University of Chicago, officially recognized as the fifth best law school on the planet.

In Chicago Logan Jade Wang made the acquaintance of Chris Thile during his studies, a man with whom in the following years he would become best friends with, a man who gave him the moral support necessary to finally graduate and become a successful lawyer who is sometimes called overseas for his high level of expertise.
