Mesothelioma Attorneys Can Provide Help to Victims by Jim Edward

Symptoms of mesothelioma are often confused with the symptoms of other diseases or conditions. After exposure to asbestos, mesothelioma symptoms emerge much later, typically decades after exposure. Patients are not able to detect the deadly disease lurking in their bodies until it has progressed to a dangerous point.

The general symptoms of mesothelioma include chest pain, coughing, chest congestion, inability to breathe freely, weight loss and fatigue. Patients suddenly get these symptoms and most dismiss it as a type of asthmatic condition. However, as mesothelioma progresses further in the body, the symptoms worsen.

The best results are achieved when mesothelioma symptoms are detected early. Detecting the disease in the earlier stages may increases life expectancy. If delayed, life expectancy is minimal and chances of prognosis weaken with every passing stage.
