Like David Letterman has his top 10 list, here are the top five reasons to hire a cerebral palsy lawyer. All are important to people in situations like yours. If you have additional questions or concerns, consult with a qualified cerebral palsy lawyer.

1. The cerebral palsy lawyer is an expert in her field

Yes, be sure that your lawyer is an expert in pursuing cerebral palsy cases. He must have expertise in the field of personal injury and cerebral palsy cases. She will have years of education, years and years of experience, and spend time daily keeping abreast with the even changing law.

General practitioners often refer cases to the cerebral palsy lawyer because of her expertise.

2. Insurance companies are nobody's friend

Your lawyer will fully analyze your case and let you know the amount of compensation you likely will receive. She will also tell you whether a settlement offer from an insurance company is reasonable. If you are not represented by an attorney, any offer is likely is not reasonable, no matter what the insurance company states.

You'll never sing, Golden Girls' "Thank You for Being a Friend" after dealing with an insurance company. They are in the business of making and keeping money, not paying it out. Insurance companies are nobody's friend.

3. The many legal twist & turns and ins & outs

As with all professions, there is much more responsibility than commonly meets the eye. The legal professional is full of twists & turns and ins & outs. While you always have the legal right to represent yourself, it likely is not in your best interest to do unless you are a cerebral palsy lawyer.

To win a case, you must investigate the medical and financial facts, conduct legal research and analysis, consult with professional experts, conduct discovery, interview and depose witnesses, and draft legal documents, ensuring that they are all filed in a timely manner, and go to court.

4. Refocus your focus with cerebral palsy lawyers

Having a team of cerebral palsy lawyers on your side will allow you to refocus your focus from the quandary of your cerebral palsy legal case to the needs and care of your child.

5. Deadlines; Sink or swim

There are many deadlines in every case. Complaints, answers, motions, discovery requests, and briefs must all be filed in a timely manner. If you fail to meet the deadlines, your case may be lost. The practice of law is a sink or swim situation. It is in your best interest to swim with a life guard (i.e. your cerebral palsy lawyer) on duty.

Your cerebral palsy lawyer will immediately investigate the medical mistake which caused your child's cerebral palsy. She will answer your questions and address your concerns in a free initial consultation and case evaluation. There is neither a fee nor a commitment for this meeting. Fees and expenses are earned if your cerebral palsy lawyer gets money for you.
