If you are a resident of Long Island and have been injured in an accident, your best choice for representation are lawyers, who reside and practice in the neighborhood, and are able to satisfactory represent you in your litigation.

Here are some common cases handled by lawyers:

1. Auto accidents

Vehicular accidents often account for majority of the practice for lawyers. There are many types of auto accidents. It can involve two or more cars or just one car where the driver loses control of the vehicle and the passengers are injured as the result. Another example is pedestrian or bicyclist being hit by a car, or motorcyclist being involved in a collision. Accident occur in a flash and in various ways: hit and run, hit in the rear, accidents due to driver’s intoxication, speeding or failure to pay attention to traffic signals. These collisions often have life changing effects on the injured party and lawyers are experienced in helping their clients regain control of their lives and fight for compensation the victims deserve.

2. Premise cases

These include trip and fall cases on the stairway that has inadequate lighting, broken steps or missing handrail. Another example is a slip and fall in the supermarket due to liquid, such as milk, on the floor which has not been removed in a prescribed amount of time. Other matters lawyers handle involve collapsed ceilings in apartment buildings and injuries occurring on people’s driveways and sidewalks. The defendants can often be a municipality, such as the City of New York, especially in cases involving sidewalk and crosswalk accidents. Recent changes in sidewalk litigation practice place liability for accidents occurring on broken sidewalks in front of one, two and three family houses on the municipality, however, premises larger than three family homes or commercial buildings must now have their sidewalks maintained by the landlords.

3. Medical malpractice

These cases include instances of avoidable mistakes or errors by doctors or other medical professionals, causing injury to the patient. In these matters the doctor must substantially deviate from the acceptable standard of care in the medical community to be held liable. Examples of medical malpractice include birth injuries, cerebral palsy, anesthesia error, failure to operate on the right part of the body or organ, failure to diagnose cancer and failure to dispense proper medication. It has become increasingly difficult to litigate medical malpractice cases, since the carriers for the doctors refuse to settle these cases outside of trial and juries are biased in favor of the physicians. These cases are expensive to litigate and the attorney must consult with an expert prior to commencing a lawsuit concerning the merits of the matter. Lawyers have expertise in litigating these difficult cases and can help their victims recover damages for pain and suffering, loss of consortium and other monetary loss, such as lost wages and medical bills.
