United Kingdom planning to rise immigrants: Euro Crisis by Alen Felix

Article published on June 2nd 2012 | Loans

If Greece comes down in the euro collapse, so that it effects can be lessened down, the Home Office of the country is making out plans so that they can cope up with the possibility of the number of immigrants increasing in the country. The nationals of the European Union that EU, have the right to work in the single market anywhere they want to.

But Theresa May, Home Secretary told a newspaper that the work in this regard is going on so that this kind of European immigration should not add to the financial trouble that is already going on.

Denis Macshane, Member of Parliament from the Labor Party was of the view and had to say to the Home Secretary that the tension was slowly increasing and the restriction was gradually becoming impractical.

In reply to this, May had to say that the trends were not being put to any kind of an examination to check that whether the rate of immigration from the countries whose economy was in a bad condition, was rising or not. She also added that even in case a single currency breaks up, then the people who have plans to work abroad then for them Britain can be one of the most suitable options as it is country in non-euro zone.

When she was questioned that whether some kinds of controls were being considered as far as an increase in this urgent immigration is concerned, she had to say that some sort of contingency planning and some work in this relation is also going on. She also added that till date there is no evidence that the rate of migration is on an increase but it is also not possible to say that what is going to happen in the future that is in the coming weeks. This information about the contingency plan added more trouble to the matter of single currency when the fourth largest ban of Spain, Bankia,urged its government to bail them out with a sum that is worth 19 billion Euros that 24 billion dollars well as 15 billion pounds. When the value of the euro had come down the European marketâ€™s worth has also come down. But according to a report that came in the month January the official adviser to the government on the issue of migration that is the Migration Advisory Committee had to say that the migration of EU was not going to have much impact on the rate of native employment.
