Factors to Consider when Choosing a Good Office Space by Blake Mitchell

Article published on March 20th 2012 | Management

One of the important factors that contribute to a companyâ€™s productivity is office space. There are many cases where the work quality of a company is largely determined by how the office is laid out and how employees function in it. The arrangement of tables, chairs and cubicles can greatly affect the levels of efficiency of employees. In the same way, the quality of the office space; its size, lighting, air conditioning, and heating; contribute to how a business runs.

Experts in workplace ergonomics say that any office should be spacious enough to give employees room to walk around. It should also be big enough to fit necessary office furniture and equipment. The furniture should be properly designed for employees to work efficiently and feel comfortable at the same time. Furniture thatâ€™s damaged or not appropriate for a specific job will affect production and efficiency. It can also be uncomfortable, distracting and even cause accidents. Proper lighting should also be given attention. Lighting can set the mood for work and create a pleasant working environment. It also projects a good image to clients and guests.

The number of employees assigned in a particular office area should also be considered. Tables and chairs should have enough legroom and spaces between them. Cubicles should not be placed too close to each other that they resemble pig pens. Small, cramped spaces contribute to employee stress which in turn affects productivity.

If you plan to set up office in Virginia, a good office space in Ballston VA is big enough to contain storage closets, and have space to accommodate large filing cabinets, and business machines. A lot of time and money can be saved if your employees do not have to leave the room to go to another, or worse to another floor just to get a file, replenish office supplies or have documents scanned or photocopied. Storage closets have spacious shelves for materials to be placed suitably and not dumped precariously on top of each other.

The office space in Ballston VA is located in the business district making it highly accessible to your clients. Building parking is available and parking lots are located nearby. Your clients need not walk a long distance to get to your office.

Finally, your prospective office space in Ballston VA is inviting. Studies have shown that a work-conducive office is one that is bright and airy, and accented with plants for a fresh and clean look.
