In the early nineteenth century a person named Marquis Mills Converse had this unique idea of making shoes with the help of this material. The brand of today was born in this way. The converse were the first the first pair of shoes dedicated solely to the athletes playing sports like tennis and basket ball in those days. It was designed to provide extra protection in the region of ankle especially for the basket ball players. This design was inspired by the famous basket ball player Chuck Taylor. The converse hi tops were the first mass produced shoes for the basket ball players in the early nineteenth century. Chuck Taylor contributed immensely toward the creation of the brand converse which it has become in the present times. He contributed new techniques to sew for better flexibility and more support gave a new direction in the making of the shoe. Chuck Taylor was later taken into the company as an ambassador promoting and selling it to the common people and others athletes. The converse hi tops were soon in use other forms apart from sports.

You might consider going to your local discount department store to compare prices. But wait, here's something you should know first. A friend of mine Who owns a Converse Chuck Taylor store told me that some shoe companies make two different models of the same style, a cheaper version for the discount outlet and a better made one for the elite running shoe store. I don't have any information regarding the Converse label but if I were to consider buying from a discount outlet, I would carefully check the shoe against the same offering at a running store.
