A must in a manâ€™s closet, tuxedos are all time demand for men. These are basically dinner suit designed in for formal dinner wear. It has several parts in wearing and is one of the costliest and most attractive dressings famous among men. These are not only meant for dinner purpose but can also be worn at marriages. Such a suit is a traditional one and is always worth having. Different categories of a suit are

* Double-breasted - This type of suit is best for men that are short at height. The double-breasted tux suit can easily hide the inappropriate height while looking very attractive.

* Single-breasted - With this style of tuxedos, you will achieve a wonderful, classic look that is perfect for all body types. If the groom is taller, then he might prefer the two-button option while shorter men would choose the one-button. These choices help balance out proportion, creating the best look for the physique.

* Tails - If you were having a formal or traditional wedding, then you might consider tails. This style is sophisticated but does not look well on shorter or round men. However, if the individual has good body proportion, then tails might be an option. The severe break between front and back is truly a classic look.

* High Vest- Similar to a high-button coat, the high vest is a good option for larger men or those with large torsos. Muted colors are very popular and can be worn for both formal and informal weddings.

* Low Vest- This option is good on all body types but if not worn correctly, it can appear more as a belly sling than a vest.

* Peaked Lapel - If the groom were short, this would be a good choice. The body will appear longer and leaner, drawing the person to look up.

* Shawl Collar - This is a good choice but can be somewhat tricky. Since the color width varies, you need to be sure you work with the right size for the body type. For instance, if the groom were already broad, then he would not want to choose a narrow collar in that it would make him appear even larger.

* Mandarin or Banded Collar - For men with thick or short necks, this style should be avoided. However, it is a good option for slender men. For the first type of individual, he should stay with a lay-down collar.

* Single-breasted- Similar to the other single-breasted style, this tuxedos style has a clean, unbroken line. Because of this, it is popular and looks excellent on tall men or those on the slender side. However, if the groom were larger and rounded, this style should be avoided.

* Cutaway- The cutaway tuxedos is what is often referred to as a â€œtraditional morning coat.â€• It was swallowtail lines and works well with any body type. In fact, shorter men often lean toward this style in that it helps create a taller look.
