Mesothelioma is cancer of the mesothelium, the protective layer surrounding many bodily organs. It is a rare form of cancer that develops due to asbestos exposure. Since a safe level of asbestos exposure is not established, it may develop even when a person is only briefly exposed to the inhalation of asbestos fibers.

Mesothelioma symptoms vary depending on the area affected. The most commonly affected area is the pleura, a thin, serous membrane around the lungs and inner walls of the chest. Pleural mesothelioma symptoms are marked by chest pain, pain when coughing, shortness of breath, unexplained weight loss, and lumps under the skin of the chest.

Mesothelioma may also occur in the abdominal cavity, in which case the symptoms are characterized by abdominal pain, swelling, tissue lumps in the abdomen, and weight loss. Mesothelioma symptoms in the pericardium, the serous membrane with two layers that surround the heart, manifest as chest pains and breathing problems. Though rare, mesothelioma that occurs in the tissue surrounding the testicles is detected by observing a mass on a testicle.

Mesothelioma symptoms are not always specific in the development of this type of cancer. As mesothelioma is rare, symptoms are likely due to another condition unless there is a prior history of asbestos exposure. The most troubling factor is that mesothelioma symptoms usually appear decades after exposure to asbestos.

The prognosis of mesothelioma cancer is poor and there are few chances of survival even in cases of early detection. Treatment may be prolonged, but it is primarily focused on making life comfortable for as long as the patient lives.

Mesothelioma patients may be eligible for compensation and seeking the advice of a mesothelioma attorney coupled with symptomatic treatment should occur. Of course no amount of money can compensate for the pain and suffering due to mesothelioma, but it may help one receive the best treatment.

Searching for a mesothelioma attorney should not be difficult if one knows the desirable qualities. A mesothelioma attorney should first and foremost be experienced in handling cases of asbestos compensation. Secondly, there is an express need that the law firm one contacts has mesothelioma attorneys licensed to practice throughout the country.

A victim of asbestos exposure should search for a mesothelioma attorney at a law firm that has successfully represented mesothelioma victims. The law firm of Baron and Budd, P.C. has a long history of precedent-setting results. Start your search for a mesothelioma attorney at a law firm that has helped mesothelioma patients seek compensation for over 30 years.
