If you are like most iPhone owners, then your phone is probably your pride and joy and something that you feel very fondly about. Those moments when you've dropped it or nearly damaged it other ways then are likely to have been highly terrifying and it's great to be able to breath a sigh of relief when the phone comes out of a scrape scott free. Often though your phone's survival won't be down to luck but rather to forward planning on your part â€“ if you have managed to think ahead and to protect your phone then it's much less likely to get broken as a result of a fall or a scrape.

So how can you go about avoiding damage to your iPhone? Well while there are lots of tips on how to avoid putting your phone in precarious positions, it can also come down to what you purchase before you start taking your iPhone out â€“ and there are many handy purchases that can help protect your phone. Here we will look at some of those.

First of all the obvious thing that can protect your phone is a case. Cases for your iPhone can avoid iPhone repairs by encasing the phone and shielding it against impacts. These are often plastic, metal or fiberglass, and will fit carefully like a shell around your iPhone to provide a second skin. Then when the iPhone hits the floor it will possibly chip or break the case â€“ but not the iPhone within. However you need to be careful when choosing your case to make sure that you get one that will do the job to a satisfactory degree. The best ones will cover the entire phone for instance rather than leaving areas unprotected, and in particular it is highly crucial that your case protects the actual screen of your iPhone as this is the most vulnerable part. In most cases where an iPhone is broken, it will be the screen that's damaged.

You should also ensure that the case doesn't prevent you from holding and using the phone easily and that you can still fit it in your pocket. There is an aesthetic element to consider also.

Next you might consider using a screen protector. This will be a film that attaches over your iPhone screen and then protects it from scratches or bumps. These are highly useful for avoiding small damages and something that anyone should invest in.

At the same time as all this though, you can also benefit from keeping your iPhone in something. For instance if you keep your phone in a bag then this can prevent you from having to get iPhone repairs. Find a bag that is small enough to carry and that has a good compartment for your phone and this way you will be holding it in your hand less meaning there's less chance of dropping it. This also means that you'll be less likely to bash your phone inside your pocket. All this can help you avoid needing to repair an iPhone in the first place and keep yours free of scratches and blemishes too so it's as good as the day you bought it.
