Things have gone in the favor of Apple regarding nano SIM card by John Henry

Article published on June 9th 2012 | Mobile Phones

This is good time period for Apple as the European Telecommunications Standards Institute (ETSI) has taken up a decision in the favor of Apple on an innovative standard of the SIM card. The measurement of the new nano-SIM cards would be 12.3x8.8mm and would possess the same thickness that as existing micro SIM cards.

Both the Nokia and Motorola are forcefully annoyed because of this announcement made by the European Telecommunications Standards Institute. Now a dayâ€™s these hi-tech mobiles are becoming slimmer and smaller than ever before because now space is important for everyone so the decision is taken for shrinking down the SIM. On the other hand both Nokia and Motorola have shown the proposal of superb design with great features which according to them is technically superior to the Apple nano-SIM.

Moreover Nokia has also claimed that the design of Apple does not meet the ETSI principles and also stated that it might get trapped in a micro SIM slot and may create numerous of headaches or problems for the customers. Also Nokia and Motorola both insisted for a push mechanism for inserting the SIM inside however Apple tray design won. On the other hand it is not possible that Nokia is against this SIM tray as it is available in its latest flagship smart phone called the Lumia 900. There are plenty of small disputes all along the way of Nokia as Apple presented a royalty free licensing of its plan whereas Nokia in jeopardy to hold back essential patents if that would be the case.

Moreover the BlackBerry maker RIM also charge against the Apple employees of re-registering the seeing that the council of carriers to cast your vote by alternative and wave it Cupertino's way. An employee of Nokia had humiliated the proposal of Apple regarding royalty-free licensing. He said that it seems like that apple is presenting a bicycle in order to get our Mercedes. Now all things have been sorted out and despite of a silent protest now everyone should now get back to their work of making smart phones with petite SIM this implies the manufacturing of the slimmer handsets for all us which si a good news for all.
