There are all kinds of singing schools around. Most of them just tell you what to sing and how to sing it. It would need a top line singing academy to physically teach you how to sing so as to enthrall your audience. Few people start out as great singers. Most have to train in various kinds of singing schools to acquire the kind of vocal control which trains your voice to emit specific sounds which add to the melody. Singing is more difficult than creating music on any kind of instrument.

There is no need to be startled. Singing means that you need to make your vocal chords stretch and emit notes that create that complex sound called music and make it sound different from everyday speech. Some people manage to make their speech sound musical. A singing academy worth its name will teach you not only what constitutes music (as opposed to cacophony) but also how to control your voice to make your singing a pleasurable experience for those who hear it. While tuning a musical instrument is an external exercise, singing schools teach you how to flex vocal muscles and control your breathing so as to render a piece of music properly.

Remember, that different kinds of songs require different kinds of singing. The best kind of singing academy will be the place where you can expect your teachers to evaluate your voice for tonal quality and then advice you on which kind of songs suit your voice. Somebody whose voice is suitable for opera would be better advised to stay away from rap. Singing hymns is a different ball game from singing country music. A husky, sexy voice would be ideal for pop. Singing schools help you to distinguish among the different kinds of music and train you accordingly.

Whether you want to learn singing because you want to follow a career in music or whether you want to do so to merely make the most of a natural aptitude, training in a singing academy is a must. Take a look at which singing schools are near you or ask to enroll where you feel you would get the best possible training.
