Make the Most of Your Unique Voice with Voice Classes by Maria Gini

Article published on January 5th 2012 | Music

Yes, your voice is unique and it takes an expert voice coach to recognize and train it. You should enroll in voice classes to give your voice that magnetic timber. A truly proficient voice coach knows that you need easy to understand instructions. Where necessary that instruction has to be demonstrated physically for you to pick up how to do something. Voice classes are needed by people whose voice needs some polishing or which cannot take strain.

You could be a public speaker or in some kind of profession like acting or personal selling or even be a lawyer. In each of these professions you need a voice that has a clear impact on the hearer and it will be a savvy voice coach who would be able to tell you how to control your voice to do so. Quite often people pick up more messages from the sound of the voice than from the actual words used. If you tell your child to go to bed in a hectoring voice, the child hears the hectoring and not the concern that a late night might damage his/her health.

However, the people who benefit the most from voice classes are singers. Your musical grammar may be perfect, but if the sound of your voice has not been taken care of by a maestro voice coach, then the actual result may leave much to be desired. Certain melodies require special vocal techniques which can be picked up only from voice classes. Knowing where to let your voice waft in the air and where to deepen the sound lends just that edge to a rendition.

Certain tunes need to be trilled and others need a bit of a boom (or might even need to be boomed). It is the highly experienced voice coach who will not only recognize it, but will also teach you how to do so. Instead of just practicing the same scales over and over again, come to one of the finest voice coaches in the world at Ken Tamplin Vocal Academy and learn how to sing as well as the singing stars.
