Article Side
Tips on Guitar Lessons for Beginners by Calvin

Article published on June 5th 2012 | Music

Learning how to play a guitar to the highest level can take ages. However, taking interest in this art and practicing enough can take you to that level you have been dreaming of. In fact, you should be warned that there is no such an easy way to master the guitar, if you cannot practice hard to get there. It will be a lie if someone told you that you can learn to play this instrument just in one sitting. Be prepared to get your fingers painful too. You cannot avoid it especially if you are just starting out. The fingers will hurt but if you practice a few hours a day, the pain will soon be past tense.

You must decide on which lessons will go with your strength, be they acoustic or electric. Guitar chords are perhaps the foundation of the art and they are used every day by both beginners and advanced players. You should practice the chords daily until you memorize them and manage to switch between them with ease. You will start with the open chords and be informed that although it is a hard task, you too can make it.

You should learn how to get your left-hand fingers working together to produce a clean sound. This is possible if you have a willing heart and are practicing daily, as per the requirements. These chords have at least one string and they are used commonly for country and folk music. A good practice starts by knowing the lines of a song in your mind. In fact, you can try and sing along while striking the strings. You should finger the chords using your top finger and ensure that you do not touch any of the adjacent strings. Chords are named from A to G, and there are other characters placed after the letters to distinguish them. If an 'm' is placed after any of the letters, then this means it is a minor chord, while a '7' means it is a dominant chord. A chord is called a major if the letter is used without a '7' or an 'm.'

You can search for guitar lessons online and become that guru you have been dreaming of. All you need is to decide on the style of music that can help you learn to play. This is true because different styles of music go with different chords, styles and techniques. Search for music stores in your locality and check if they offer the lessons that you are interested in.

You can compare the rates charged by the guitar teachers to ensure that you will be getting value from the lessons within your budgetary needs. You can also join any forums related to the guitar lessons and get the help from this online community. The forums will also refer you to the best online guitar lessons that will leave no stone unturned. You are advised to practice patience even when you feel like you are not improving. Remember, a journey of a thousand miles starts with only one step!

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/music-articles/tips-on-guitar-lessons-for-beginners.htm - Article Side

Calvin - About Author:
My son ended up buying a new a acoustic guitar after he had a few a guitar lessons to get him some good basic knowledge and confidence.

Article Keywords:
acoustic guitar, guitar lessons

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!